"The Loveliest Girl I Know — My Wife"

Charming Romance of Mr. Philip Boileau,
the Artist who has
Married the Girl whose
Beauty he made Famous.

Mr. Philip
Boileau

Mr.
Boileau

AN event of the deepest interest to artists, lovers of art, pretty girls, susceptible young men and other important classes of our population has just occurred.

Philip Boileau, the celebrated delineator of American girls, has taken a wife.

As Mr. Boileau's pictures of girls are so widely admired as those of any living artist, there will naturally be much curiosity to know just what sort of girl he admires personally above all others. This curiosity will be gratified by the charming portrait which is published on this page. It is made from a new pastel for which Mrs. Boileau sat as a model. It is one of a series of the artist's newest and most successful pictures, which reproduce the features of the same model with more or less closeness.

Mrs. Boileau is tall, and has a wealth of fair hair and a very sympathetic expression. As for her features, the portrait will speak for them.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Boileau is a romance in which love and art are delightfully mingled. Mrs. Boileau, who was Miss Emily Gilbert, of Quakertown, Pa., was studying dramatic art at the school of acting in Carnegie Hall, New York, when the artist met her. It was a case of love at first sight, and the impetuous artist succeeded in persuading Miss Gilbert to give up her girlish dreams of being another Bernhardt in order to become Mrs. Boileau.

An artist whose specialty is making pictures of pretty girls can never see one without wishing to paint her. From the first time Mr. Boileau met Miss Gilbert he began to make pictures of her. The more he drew her face the deeper he fell in love, and the deeper he fell into that condition the better he drew. As a result he found that he was making better pictures than he had ever done before. This happy form of reciprocity delighted both of them.

And now when anybody asks Mr. Boileau what is his ideal of

He adds, "the physician may be compelled to treat the modern soul as though it were a diseased thing."

In the Twelve lost selling novels that he has examined he finds nothing but the disorders of sentimentality, rivalry, egotism, magnetism, and narcissistic longing.

He cries out: "The female complex with its jowles of fat, its rivalries, its intrigues, restless umbels and anarchisms, its mere sexual aims, forced to vent its

"The Boieson Girl" has won a special mention in the public opinion of the artist of representing the American girl as a sturdy, athletic, impulsive and sometimes arrogant, he makes her sweet delicate, passive, tender, feminine. Every novelist should be required to be honest. The only way to do this is to let his imagination and to his sense of social responsibility to society.

Some very distinguished writers of fiction, beyond the reach of the law, have been very much lacking in this kind of integrity. They protect the wrong things. We invent the wrong things. We invent the wrong things as fast as all upon the corruption which has brought the corruption in our young people by protecting them against the corruption.

THE CURSE OF "CARMEN"

The Tragic Scene Between Mme. Gay and Sig. Zenate'o Which Enraptured the Audience Until They Rose to Their Feet in Wild Applause, Crowded Forward—and the Floor Collapsed, Carrying Them Down to Death in the Opera House Cellar.

Extraordinary Series of Mishaps, Calamities, Accidents and Deaths All Over the World Which Have Pursued This Ill-Fated Opera.

AT THE Manhattan Opera House in New York the other day, in the last act of "Carmen," the astonished audience saw the famous dowry of the Spanish gipsy slung to the floor with a stream of blood flowing from her head—the hero, Don José, had been shot by the villain, the gipsy himself. The scene moved in Florence, Italy, the "Carmen" of the Florence Opera House, crisscrossed, fell and broke a kilo. And the same scene moved in the streets of the United States. In the last act of the opera, the United States Army and Navy in the Americas record a shocking calamity, a production of "Carmen."

Many thousands of people saw the crowd that the floor of the San Juan Palace in Havana was strewn by its victim, Carmen, was strewn before the eyes of the audience. The crowd of people in the street and the crowd of the movement was too much for the weak footing, which collapsed, and they saw her helpless drop into the cellar.

In the palace which followed this woman and her kind, the number of victims at the hospital is thought many a day from their injuries.

There were three accidents happening to the crowd of people in the street and the crowd at almost the same time might well strain the public's mind what it all came down to.

times and I began to leave with plates of the wrapped bread. When the authorities arrived they took away one of the loaves and I was left with only one. The next day the service staff saw me sitting in the Bellevue. There a Swiss cook was on the foot of the stairs. He asked me who was singing. I told him I was singing. He said, "You are singing, but you are not to be out alone, the contagious singer." I started another dose and when the cure was over I was told to go to the Bellevue. I started singing the opera with only a slight cough.

Why the kitchen staff was not placed in quarantine is because the guard feared I would threaten the situation. I would have been locked there, their attitude toward me was not very friendly. I was told to leave because it was "Garnes."

For a long time Emma Clark, now in Vienna, told me that she was in the hospital from accidents. Trouble fell on others but not on her, which was contrary to the traditions of the hospital. She said that she came first, though not as a patient.

It happened near the end of the rainy season. I was in the hospital for a long time. One day and Requiem (M. Salinger) an

She also thinks the band friends to speech her because they admire her for some special reason, but she predicts the death of Mike. Therence, a Parisian idol of the opera College, and one of the latest "Carmen" stars.

Very recently, after a rehearsal of the first love scene, Mike Therence was not by the cypress market to go to his home. The manager and ruler of the scene and the director's approval of help saved her life. The police were unable to trace the affair. In any case, and for lack of a better classification it is put down in the records of "Carmen" as another "Apache" outrage—though

Mike, Nadezhda seriously advises that "Carmen" as it now appears should never be repeated. She says that the opera should be so altered as to agree with the facts or some public statement of the law. She says that if these precautions are neglected, "the 'ex-Carmen,' some day the growing resistance of the public to the opera will be a bomb outrage or some equally horrible catastrophe."

voiced shot. As Miss Gentry returns to him out of bed, the reception room, while and scared, three more shots ring out.

The young people seem staggered, unable to move or utter a word. But their savior disappears when young Norton re-enters, taking empty cartridge shells from his smoking revolver, and saying:

"I told him I would treat him how he interfered in my affairs." Then to Miss Gentry:

"Elizabeth, I have just killed William Franklin. Are you still willing to marry

Of they trudged through the night over the country roads. Shortly before 1 o'clock they reached the minister's house.

The Rev. Mr. Franklin was as obliging as the Registrar had been. Having seen and inspected the marriage license, he announced at once to perform the ceremony.

This had hardly been concluded when there were loud knocks on the minister's door.

"Elizabeth, I have just killed William Franklin. Are you still willing to marry

"Oh, clerkroom," exclaimed the bride, clinging to her.

"No," she sobbed, clinging to her husband of less than an hour. "No, no, you shall take me, too!"

She was carried for by the minister's family till morning, while the officers went off with Norton to look him up in the County Jail at Marshall, N. C., to await trial.

It was in his cell at the jail that Norton was interviewed and supplied most of the foregoing details. On the advice of his attorneys, he would not say more, except that developments would show that his act had been committed in self-defense.

It is anticipated that the trial of Norton will bring into the tragedy other elements of a sensational character, with references to which the two families concerned maintain absolute silence.

There are various theories. One is that at least one other man besides Norton had a hand in the shooting, although he should have been responsible for it.

There is evidence, too, that if Franklin was a particularly dangerous rival, it is stated that he was not alone preceding the shooting. Norton had a gun in his pocket, and the officers returned from the wars are all persons in the eyes of the public.

To this attraction Franklin added more than usual personal attractions, and it is stated that he was not alone preceding the shooting. Norton had a gun in his pocket, and the officers returned from the wars are all persons in the eyes of the public.

Norton is likely 21 years old—more than a year younger than was his first. The situation was calculated to call up all his powers of determination to win the girl of his choice.

It was only his desperate act that really settled the question in his favor, making him in a moment a greater hero than the soldier-savior who can follow the feminine mind and heart?

William Franklin, and Jones.

The minister appeared confounded.

"Yes," said Norton, "I shot him."

"Why did you do it?" demanded the horrified minister.

Norton looked in the eyes of his bride as she still clung to him. She nodded, and he answered:

"I will tell you the whole story. We were married. Franklin came to the house and tried to prevent it. He went too far, and I shot him."

"Did you know when you left the house that you had killed that young man?" asked one of the officers.

"Yes," said Norton.

"The officer turned to the bride.

"Did you know that this man you were running away with had killed William Franklin?"

"Yes," she answered. "I would have married him even if I had known that he would kill me the next day."

To the minister who had just performed the solemn ceremony the shock of these disclosures may be imagined where it is known that he is an uncle of the now-dead man.

"You are under arrest," said officers Jones to Norton. "You had better say 'You are charged with the murder of your bride.'"

When Is a Woman an Old Maid?

THE burning question—"When is a woman an old maid?"—is a question that has been asked in every generation. Over and over again we have heard the old maid in the country, the old maid in the city, the old maid in the street, the old maid in the house, the old maid in the garden, the old maid in the field, the old maid in the wood, the old maid in the water, the old maid in the air, the old maid in the earth, the old maid in the sky, the old maid in the sun, the old maid in the moon, the old maid in the stars, the old maid in the planets, the old maid in the galaxies, the old maid in the universe.

For those who dread the epithet, and who shun at the first gray hair glimpsed in the mirror being a momentary pang to her heart. Made today realize the entire possibility of silvered tresses to her hair. Bright, fresh complexion which any woman can own at the expense of a little care and common sense. Certainly not at the first faint whispering of Time's finger on cheek and nose. Beauty of expression and knowledge her little world right, "Never!"

she so simply compensates for the loss of youth and dimple that no sane person can deem their advent the starting point of a revolting epiphany. The boys and girls grow into youth and maidenhood, and in these days realize their own youth. Her married costume rather loathingly regard her as an old maid. When she wears that costume, so has she profited by the quiet leisure of her days. Time flies, but she matches none. And when does her charm wane? When she has the bated words "old maid" be written after her name—in her own imagination—and the covert murmure of "maiden-ness."

Not while her feminine friends glaze her dream, half-awake, on the happiness shared by some one—by the little words that might have been. Not while she goes off confiding hands into hers, sure of sympathy and comfort. Not while she and her whole clashing. In her own hands lies the power to put the years at defiance, and to the question, "When is a Maid an Old Maid?" in her own eyes every woman at her will can make her little world right, "Never!"

Why You Should Do Your Own Housework.

IT is a common-sense saying that a woman who does her own housework is a woman who is a woman. It is a saying that is true in every generation. Over and over again we have heard the old maid in the country, the old maid in the city, the old maid in the street, the old maid in the house, the old maid in the garden, the old maid in the field, the old maid in the wood, the old maid in the water, the old maid in the air, the old maid in the earth, the old maid in the sky, the old maid in the sun, the old maid in the moon, the old maid in the stars, the old maid in the planets, the old maid in the galaxies, the old maid in the universe.

PERPLEXING PREDICAMENT OF THREE FASHIONABLE SOCIETY BEAUTIES.

What New York

Mrs. Waldorf Astor.

The New York society scene has been so perplexing a predicament for the last few weeks that it has become a subject of conversation for the most casual observer. The women who are the center of the scene are Mrs. Waldorf Astor, Mrs. Perry Belmont, and Mrs. Roosevelt. Each of them has a story to tell, and each is a subject of speculation for the other two.

Mrs. Waldorf Astor, the wife of John D. Rockefeller, has been the center of the scene for some time. She is a woman of great power and influence, and her actions are always watched closely. She has been the subject of much speculation, and her name is always mentioned in connection with the other two women.

Mrs. Perry Belmont, the wife of John D. Rockefeller, has also been a subject of much speculation. She is a woman of great power and influence, and her actions are always watched closely. From now on we have all been more or less excited on the subject of wraps made of double width, it is cut in one long strip. The shoulder is of some, sometimes and the sleeves are cut from the rest of the wrap. It is toward the side and down the front. Made of broadcloth, it is the only one and comes down to one's ankles, as we hear that the new long wrap is there. We have a devoted any amount of time and good pay to a matter to this question, which only was answered, looking fashion, in answer to question, "What most beautiful?" and the answer given to the question, "What is the newest?" is, "The wrap." But when it comes to deciding on the new wrap, it is a matter of taste. The new wrap is a long, narrow strip of cloth, cut in one long strip. The shoulder is of some, sometimes and the sleeves are cut from the rest of the wrap. It is toward the side and down the front. Made of broadcloth, it is the only one and comes down to one's ankles, as we hear that the new long wrap is there. Another wrap is a long, narrow strip of cloth, cut in one long strip. The shoulder is of some, sometimes and the sleeves are cut from the rest of the wrap. It is toward the side and down the front. Made of broadcloth, it is the only one and comes down to one's ankles, as we hear that the new long wrap is there. I think it is particularly charming in its simplicity. This cloak, made of double width, it is cut in one long strip. Made of broadcloth, it is the only one and comes down to one's ankles, as we hear that the new long wrap is there. We have a devoted any amount of time and good pay to a matter to this question, which only was answered, looking fashion, in answer to question, "What most beautiful?" and the answer given to the question, "What is the newest?" is, "The wrap." But when it comes to deciding on the new wrap, it is a matter of taste.

EDITORIAL SECTION

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1907.

LOOK OUT! FATHER BOSTON IS PUTTING ON HIS HEAVY BOOTS!

SOME persons who devote their lives to studying the human body tell us that in seven years all the atoms of the body change. A man now may look as he did seven years ago, but he has in reality an entirely new body.

The character that shows itself in a child in its early life will show itself again in a man twenty or forty years later. A man's character may change because of the habits that are bred in him by environment, but in its essential qualities it remains the same throughout life.

Cities and States bear in many respects a likeness to men and women. A city changes in physical appearance, but it retains its character in spite of the different human atoms that go to make up the whole.

The spirit of independence that was more noticeable in Boston than in any other city of the American continent before the War of the Revolution led the inhabitants in those days to throw overboard the tea that had been sent here from England rather than pay a tax to the English King. The men of those days gave up their lives rather than yield to conditions which they believed to be unjust.

Coming down to later years, Boston was the center of opposition to the slave power. The Revolution of 1776 was born in Boston and the revolution that did away with slavery achieved its greatest strength within cannon shot of Bunker Hill.

Another revolution is now in progress. The people are throwing off the yoke of the big grafters. They will have no more of government by men who are bound together solely for profit. They will not permit capitalists, who have succeeded in controlling the production of the necessities of life, to control, also the politicians who make the laws and who administer the laws for the people.

As the railroads, the banking interests and the giant trusts are trying to control the National government, so in almost every city of the United States the Public Service Corporations have obtained control of the city government.

In the city of Boston, the Traction Trust (otherwise known as the Elevated Railway Company), the Lighting Trust and the Telephone Trust are the chief sources of power at City Hall.

These corporations are contributing now, either directly or indirectly, to the campaign funds of the candidates of the two old parties.

MR. FITZGERALD CANNOT DENY THAT THE BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY, THE LIGHTING TRUST AND THE TELEPHONE TRUST ARE BIG CONTRIBUTORS TO HIS CAMPAIGN FUND. TOGETHER WITH THE CITY CONTRACTORS WHO HAVE AN UNDERSTANDING WITH THE MAYOR THEY ARE THE CHIEF SOURCES OF SUPPLY FOR THE ENORMOUS FUND THAT MR. FITZGERALD IS SPENDING TO RE-ELECT HIMSELF.

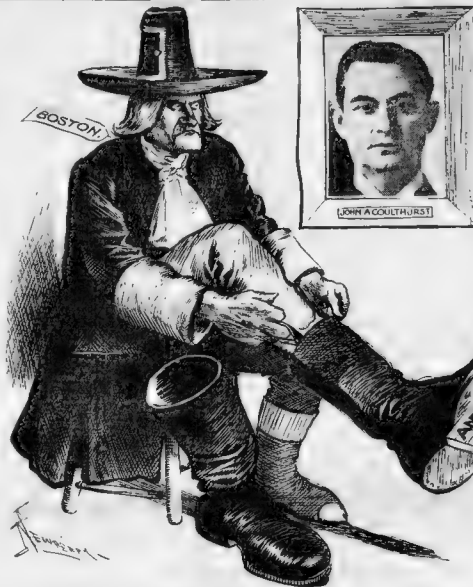

THE MANAGERS OF MR. HIBBARD'S CAMPAIGN WILL NOT DENY THAT THE PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS ARE BIG CONTRIBUTORS TO THE FUND WITH WHICH MR. HIBBARD HOPES TO BE ELECTED.

There is no partisanship in the public service corporations. They give indiscriminately to the funds of both parties in order that whichever man wins THEY will be in power and can get what they want.

The only campaign fund that has received nothing from these corporations AND WILL ACCEPT NOTHING is the Independence League campaign fund.

This is a small fund at its best, but it is enough. It will hire the halls and pay for the printed matter and the postage stamps. And when the election is over Mr. Couthurst will owe nothing whatever to the gentlemen who have franchises to push through or to be vetoed.

In the picture accompanying this article Father Boston is shown in the act of putting on his heavy boots preparatory to kicking the grafters out of City Hall. THE BIG GRAFTERS are the men Father Boston is after this time, and he needs his heaviest boots to perform the job.

There Is Something Going to Happen on December 10

THE LAW'S STRONG ARM

We are to-day confronting an American condition.

And that American condition is chiefly responsible for American difficulties, American wholesale robbery, demoralization in American finance, and, to a great extent, in American business life.

The law should represent the determination of citizens not to tolerate dishonesty, not to allow one man to deprive another of his property.

The law in the United States still works, when the question involved is the robbery of ONE MAN by one man.

If a pickpocket steals ONE man's watch—the law's arm reaches out and grabs him if it can. He can't go free—unless he happens to be one of the useful agents of a little political boss working for a big financial boss. But it is not so with the wholesale criminal.

We have in America a system of exemption from the law's power, for the chosen few.

That system is becoming more and more complicated, more and more thoroughly developed.

It is so well developed that in the big cities even the petty individual criminal goes free, on one pretext or another, if he can prove that, in spite of his robbing little people 364 days, he serves big people ON ELECTION DAY.

The difficulty with the law in this country is this: The people elect holding-office individuals to make and enforce laws FOR THE PEOPLE. And a few very rich men hire the office holders to make laws for THEM, or at least to interpret and apply the laws for them.

A few big trusts and financial criminals stand close to the law, and friendly to it. The law's long arm reaches out past them, past those that rob thousands and millions, to seize the little, ragged, shivering criminal who robs the individual and robs him of relatively little.

The real problem of the people in the United States is to arrange law and its enforcement in such a way as to seize and punish and frighten the really dangerous criminals—those that now stand above the law, in different to it, or in actual control of it.

There are a hundred big men in the United States every one of whom has stolen millions on millions from the people by watered stock, by franchises obtained through bribery—in a dozen ways.

These men are not punished. On the contrary they are hailed as public benefactors when, in a moment of hysterical panic and excitement, they loan out a few millions to Wall street gamblers and make for themselves a great many millions more.

The law deals now fairly well with the little criminals, the little, old-fashioned villains who plied their trades long ago when our laws were made.

But the law in our country appears to act like an old-fashioned lady who sees a trolley line, a quickly moving elevator or a steam car for the first time. Our law shakes and shivers, seems very doubtful and decides to do nothing in the presence of the big, modern inventions in dishonesty.

Let a man steal a ham—THE LAW KNOWS WHAT TO DO WITH HIM. He must go to jail.

Let another man steal twenty-five cents from every human being who BUYS a ham—that wholesale robber nukes laws or ignores them in safety.

Money is the power in modern life. The power that belonged to title, to military force, to the aristocracy of birth in olden days has been transferred now to the big pocketbook. The contempt for law felt and clearly shown by the modern financial baron is the same contempt that was felt and shown by the feudal baron in the old castle.

And the task of the people to-day is the same as it was hundreds of years ago—to make the man with the power obey the law and fear it, as it is obeyed and feared by the little man at the bottom of the social hill.

There is not an American citizen ignorant of the fact that this Sunday picture is a TRUE picture. Every one of us knows one or more big men to whom the law is a joke.

The country will not be a genuine republic until the public welfare—the rights of the smallest man—shall be thoroughly protected. In New York and in the other great cities there are notorious robbers, shameless, open and proved dealers of the public, swindlers of honest investors—the law does not touch them, the officers of the law fear them and bow down to them. There is no more class influence, no more servile reverence for class in China or Tibet than in this country, where a million dollars notoriously stolen are accepted as a badge of respectability and a certificate of legal immunity.

The small man's investments will be safe when the big man IS AFRAID to rob the small investor.

The small man's employment will be safe when the big man IS AFRAID to include in the business, piratical game that degrades business and discharges men from work.

There are eighty millions of people in America. More than seven million, more than half of them own the law, report each other to one another.

There are a small handful of bold pirates who absorb the profits of the tens of millions, juggle with their book funds, drain their national resources and then, when hard times come, roll their eyes in a new way by something more than at present the dishonestly managed properties in which they have deceived public confidence.

Every little pickpocket in a city is a dangerous criminal. If THE LAW does not arrest and punish every little man from them.

How long is it going to take the people of the United States to put the big thieves in jail and frighten the BIG men out of their theories?

How long will the big law be permitted to represent lawless finance and to deprive human rights?

What do the people propose to make them realize that nothing is safe, no property, no status, in a country where the punishment of the law is reserved for the little man, for the little danger?

THE GREATEST PARTY

CTHE greatest political party in this country is not the Republican party.

It is not the Democratic party.

It is a party with millions of members!

It consists of the citizens who believe in certain of the principles of both parties.

The broadest definition of this great American party is that it believes in the elemental Jeffersonian doctrine of the least amount of government being the best government, but at the same time sympathizing absolutely with the Republican stand for national glory and power expressed in the pulsance of the national government.

These two basic elements of political faith do not necessarily conflict. And they do not conflict in the minds of the citizens who believe in one as strongly as in the other.

Nor are these major principles in conflict with the most virile traditions of the Democratic party. Taken together, they typify Jacksonian Democracy.

But thousands upon thousands of these citizens voted the Republican national ticket simply because they regarded the Democratic party as a broken organization, whereas the Republican party was compact and responsible.

Thousands of citizens who did not approve of Republican policies, as a whole, nevertheless felt that it was wisest to entrust the government to the most responsible party.

Though naturally Democrats, thousands upon thousands of citizens voted the Republican national ticket because it presented at the time responsible party government in contrast with Democratic confusion. But were it possible to set aside from both parties the great vote representing belief in some of the principles of both, that third party, now nebulous and without a home, would be the greatest.

As it is, it forms the deciding national force.

The citizens who believe with Jefferson that the least amount of government is the best government, and who, though independent of mind in politics, do not approve of personal government such as we now have, and, withal, find joy in national glory and greatness—these citizens are most numerous.

Some call themselves Democrats. Some call themselves Republicans. And both parties in their platform seek the favor of this present element.

Where the majority of it casts its strength lies victory.

Teddy-B and Teddy-G the Bear Detectives

But Billy sneezed and TEDDY-G was just as scared as he could be."

III.---The Mystery of a Queer House

Verses by Seymour Eaton. Drawings by C. H. Twelvetees

Copyright 1907, by Seymour Eaton

TEDDY-B got a letter in his mail one day
From a little lad, who had this to say.
"Dear TEDDY-B: A boy told me
That you never charge a penny fee
For helping boys their sums to do
When the work is hard and lessons new;
But it isn't sums I want to-day;
It's about a house that's down our way
Called the house that Jack built—big and square;
And Jack who built it must be there;
But I can't find him high or low,
And it's about this Jack I want to know,
The rat is there that ate the malt,
Or his eldest son, in gloomy vault;
And the cat, they say, that killed the rat
Has kittens three in Jack's old hat;
And the cow is there with the crumpled horn
That tossed the dog quite over the barn.
But the dog is dead, I heard folks say;
He broke his back that very day.
The man in clothes all tattered and torn,
And the pretty maiden all forlorn
Who were married by the priest all shaven and shorn,
Have moved away to a country new.
They lived in the house for a year or two,
And the farmer plants each year his corn
And his rooster crows each Sunday morn;
But Jack, the man who built the place,
No one has ever seen his face.
A prize is offered, the papers say,
A hundred dollars to be given away,
To the boy or girl who discovers Jack
In room or closet or chimney crack,
Or garret shelf or chest or clock,
Or in secret vault now fast with lock,
Or anywhere within the walls
Of this famous house of fifty halls.
Now, if you'll help, and TEDDY-G,
I'll divide the prize among us three.
Excuse the writing and the blots of ink,
And answer soon." Signed "Billy Blink."
"How's that for a letter?" said TEDDY-B,
When he read the story to TEDDY-G.
"The letter's good," TEDDY-G replied;
"But I wonder where that Jack could hide.
It may not be safe for Teddy Bears
To go prowling around those halls and stairs."

"Now, don't get scared," said TEDDY-B;
"You come at once to the place with me.
Detectives are brave and never scare
In the darkest rooms or anywhere."
They met Billy Blink along the way,
As off they went that very day.
The house they found; it stood alone
With a sign "Beware" on a great big stone
At the very door, and overhead
The words "Who enters here is dead."
It made Billy shiver and TEDDY-G
Wasn't quite so brave as a bear can be.
But in they went, Billy Blink behind,
To search the house and Jack to find.

They examined marks upon the walls
And tip-toed round in rooms and halls.
Afraid to stumble or to jingle keys,
Or to speak a word, or to cough or sneeze.
But Billy sneezed and TEDDY-G
Was just as scared as he could be.
He jumped and yelled and struck a chair,
And made things tumble everywhere;
And the echo sounded round about
Like distant voices saying, "Get out!"
They each had candles to light the way,
For the halls were dark, though it was day.
They looked in closets and chimney place
To see if by chance they might find a trace
Of Jack the builder, who was never seen
By rich or poor, by king or queen,
When walking across the cellar floor
TEDDY-B stood hard on a kind of door
Which opened down like traps you've seen,
And he found a hole where the door had been.
He slipped right through and out of sight
In a well that looked as dark as night.
He hit the bottom—you could hear the whack—
And then his voice came calling back;
"Throw down a match, I want a light.
I hold the candle good and tight.
The rat is here; I heard him squeak.
I struck him hard like a lightning streak."
When he got a light he found a way
Where steps were cut in the walls of clay,
And up he came on paw and knee
To Billy Blink and TEDDY-G.
They climbed up stairs to the highest floor

And came at last to an iron door,
Its knocker, brass, was a lion's head,
And underneath these words they read:
"This door is opened with a golden key,
And the room inside is the place to see
The builder Jack and his shop and tools;
But all who enter here are fools."

Said TEDDY-B, as he tried the key,
"This warning bold, it won't scare me,"
But TEDDY-G and Billy Blink
Were scared so blue they couldn't think.
The door it opened, and Jack was there
Waiting to welcome each Teddy Bear;
And Billy's hand, he shook it, too,
And said: "I'm glad to welcome you."
"So you are Jack?" said TEDDY-B;
"And who is this lady here I see?"
The old man answered in kindly tone:
"You see, good friends, I'm not alone;
I am the man all tattered and torn,
And Jack's my name, a builder born,
And this is the maiden all forlorn.
These signs and sounds and doors so queer
Scare everyone who enters here.
Since you're the first to use the key,
You'll have reward for bravery,
I built this house for this maiden dear,
And here we've lived for fifty year;
It cost me every cent I had,
And my wedding suit looked pretty bad;
But now I'm rich and have cash to spare
For Billy Blink or Teddy Bear.
I offered the prize to try my luck
At finding a boy who has lots of pluck.
And Billy here has won it fair;
The gold is his with you to share."

And these the Bears, two jolly chums,
Who help small boys to do their sums,
And teach them how to be brave and bold,
To win with pluck a prize of gold,
And this the man once tattered and torn,
Who married the maiden all forlorn,
Who milked the cow with the crumpled horn,
That tossed the dog that worried the cat
That killed the rat
That ate the malt that lay in the house that Jack built.

"Detectives are brave and never scare in the darkest rooms or anywhere."

"They each had candles to light the way for the halls
were dark, though it
was day."

"The door it opened and Jack was there
Waiting to welcome each Teddy Bear."

"And Billy here has won it fair;
The gold is his with you to share."

Long Runs Find Boston with Few New Attractions

Nearly All of the Theatres Offer Continued Shows This Week; Vaudeville Bills Strong.

RESTING after the feast—this is the attitude of the theatrical producers in Boston this week. So many big productions are enjoying "runs" here just now that it leaves the field almost bare of new offerings. It is only for a week, however, for on Monday next there are a number of new plays scheduled. The only change in the bills at Boston playhouses this week are at the Boston Theatre, where "The Jew" is booked; at the Castle Square on Thursday evening, the first performance there of "Aida"; at the Grand Opera House with "Kidnaped for Revenge"; and the Bowdoin Square with "Dangers of Paris." The vaudeville and burlesque houses, of course, offer new bills. At all the other houses the plays continue another week. Here is the list:

What the Theatres Offer

Boston Theatre

"The Jew" at the Boston Theatre this week needs another popular play to the season's repertoire. It is one of Joseph Arthur's earliest successes, and has held its place with the public ever since. Dealing with the story of a Jew who is persecuted for his race, it is a play of great power and interest. It is a play of great power and interest. It is a play of great power and interest.

DANCE in a decade a "real play" is put on the local stage. "The Hypocrite," now at the Park, is one of these "real plays"—remarkable in the perfection of its construction, fascinating in the truth of its story, impressive and satisfying in its interpretation. A little chat with Jessie Millward, who plays the leading female role in it, gives point to one of the reasons for its unusual success. Miss Millward, in discussing the work of the other members of the cast, said: "No matter how small the part, it should be and it is played as carefully as though it were the stellar role." The entire company, from Mrs. Bennett down to the girl who has only a "bit" to work as a unit. Such a character is a positive counterfeit of the prototype. For those who admire strong dramatic roles, who admire strong dramatic plays, a treat is in store if they see "The Hypocrite."

THIS week marks the beginning of a new arrangement at the Castle Square, whereby the productions will be made on Thursday, instead of Monday. This is an excellent arrangement, for it insures the stagers getting a full day's rest during their week, where before they got none. As a result, their voices will be in better trim all the time. It enables Mr. Mason, also, to present one of his prime dramas for the full run of each opera, even during a full week, and the other for the following week, instead of "doubling up" each week, as they have been doing. It is interesting to note, also, that the performance of "Job Roy" next Tuesday afternoon will be a professional matinee, to which Manager Mason invites all members of the theatrical companies now playing in Boston. The performance is for the general public and as a result the audience will be almost as interesting as the performance.

THIS art of dancing is one of the most difficult and yet most graceful expressions of power and movement, and its study upon the American stage could be easily counted on the fingers of one hand. It is, therefore, always a pleasure to note an addition to its ranks. In Miss Tridella Janney, who is at the Hollis Street Theatre with Hattie Williams, in "The Little Church," we have, undoubtedly, a toe dancer of the first rank, and one whose progress her work will be watched with interest. She brings to her dances imagination and grace, and the applause which greets the difficult steps demonstrates that our audience appreciates the beauty of pose and the announcement of her coming with future attractions will hold forth promise of great pleasure to those of our playgoers who appreciate such artistic work as she can do. Best of all, she is a Boston girl.

LEARN, through the medium of a most interesting letter in verse, that Alexander J. MacDonald, the poet, who recently dedicated a beautiful volume of his poems, under the title of "Star Gazing," to Miss Thelma Law.

Yes, sir! I'll make some sinners snash
Their teeth. I work for love, not cash;
And may I never get my lash
With great respect,
And when I find my friend, I smash
Between the eyes!

QUICK-WITTEDNESS on the part of a member of the police department and the driver of one of the delivery wagons saved the matinee performance of "Shore Acres" on Wednesday at the Globe Theatre. The police department, in question, was the one that was called to the scene of the accident. The driver of the wagon, who was driving to the theatre, was stopped by the police. Dr. Greene's NERVURA
BLOOD NERVE REMEDY

For Mothers

Motherhood is woman's chief joy, and greatest trial. Proud in mind, and blent with woman's love, those whose children laugh and grow in perfect health.

But only a woman knows at what a price this blessing obtained. Prepare for this joy, and greatest trial, with Dr. Greene's NERVURA, BLOOD NERVE REMEDY. It perfects the blood, and enriches the blood, it strengthens the nerves. It is the woman's greatest tonic.

Dr. Greene's NERVURA is good for baby as well as mother and father. It is the best of family remedies.

GRAND OPERA STARS REHEARSING HERE

ALTHOUGH there will be many new faces in the San Carlo Grand Opera Company when it comes to the Majestic Theatre a week from tomorrow night, practically all of those who were for the organization its good wage when it made its debut here at the Park Theatre last Spring still continue with it. The management all, however, has been the same, and the organization of the company is the same as in the last year.

Of those who have already made their debut here, the most prominent are: Alice Nielsen, soprano; Victor Maurel, tenor; and Marie Lloyd, mezzo-soprano. These three are the mainstays of the company, and their presence is a guarantee of high quality.

The company also includes several other talented artists, including the famous contralto, Madame Tietjens, and the young soprano, Miss G. M. Brown. The management, under the direction of Mr. Henry Russell, is determined to give the audience the best possible performance.

SOCIETY SYMPHONY KEYS TO GLADDEN NOTE OF SWEET CHARITY; SERIES OF FETES

Numerous Philanthropies Stir Smart Set Leaders to Plan for Brilliant Season.

By a Society Woman.

CHARITY is the golden note that most thins social will be keyed for weeks to come, and for its sweet sake the world fashionable is busy planning functions innumerable and brilliant.

The season, with new splendor of "design" and perfection of "execution," is upon us. A cold commercial wave has struck Boston's "400"—that is, the feminine element of it—and fair solutions and "frenzied financiers" abound in the social realm. Boston society's winter is surely distinctive for one thing—the great number of its charitable affairs. Perhaps in no other city in the world does charity as an object play so important a part in the giving of large social affairs, nor does any other city boast of a social organization where interest in charitable institutions is more sincere.

Leaders in Pet Philanthropies.

Prominent among the pet philanthropies of fashion in the Hub soon to be benefited are the Home for Crippled Children, the Animal Rescue League, the North Bennet Street Industrial School, the Boston Nursery for Blind Babies, the Carney Hospital, the South End Day Nursery and the Elizabeth Peabody House.

Among the society women always to the fore in these affairs for charity is Mrs. R. V. R. Thayer, who is a well-known leader in her smart world, but who always finds time to devote to the needy. Mrs. Thayer is especially interested in the South End Day Nursery, for the benefit of which a sale is to be held at the Vendome December 2 and 3. The nursery is supported wholly by voluntary contributions and is now caring for seventy children daily, which admits of over sixty mothers being self-supporting. Mrs. Thayer is also much interested in the little convalescents at the Children's Hospital, and when in town devotes considerable of her time to them.

Mrs. Gardner, in her own quiet way, does considerably more for charity than she is generally suspected of doing, and besides buying freely at all the charity sales, leading her name as patroness for the many entertainments and purchasing sums to worthy institutions. It is said that she visits the homes of and looks out for several families in need of aid.

Aids Fund for Carney Hospital.

Miss Clara Endicott Sears, one of Boston's wealthiest society bachelors, is another who devotes quite as much attention to charitable works as to society pleasures. Her especial devotion is to children, but she is always looked upon as the leading spirit in the affairs given in aid of the Carney Hospital, and, as usual, has charge of the sale to be given at the Vendome December 14 in aid of the hospital, which will be an exceedingly fashionable and popular event.

Among other society women, all of whom are adding their mites to some philanthropy, are Mrs. Francis I. Amory, Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, Mrs. Lars Anderson, Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Mrs. Edward Brundage, Mrs. Arthur Cheney, Mrs. Eben Draper, Mrs. William Endicott, Jr., Mrs. Curtis Gould, Jr., Mrs. Oscar Tawill, Mrs. Henry P. Quincy and Mrs. Henry Parsons King.

FEEDS CALL OF CHARITY

LEADERS OF "400" AMONG PATRONESSES AT FAIR FOR SOUTH END DAY NURSERY

Rehearsals Promise Big Success of "Patience," to Be Given in Jordan Hall.

Prominent among the charitable events of the coming month is the fair at the South End Day Nursery, which is to be held on the second and third of December. The fair is to be held at the South End Day Nursery, which is a charitable institution for the care of young children. GREET DEBUTANTES AT SMART AFFAIRS

Leaders of Fashion Return From Thanksgiving Fetes in Country for Program in City.

The past week has been exceedingly hot in society, country house parties and family reunions being the chief and practically the only divisions. The week, according to the brilliant and brilliant, proving much more than the usual smart season. The week, according to the brilliant and brilliant, proving much more than the usual smart season.

The two most important bids of the week to make their formal bows to society were Miss Ruth Nicholson and Miss Edith Chase. Miss Nicholson was introduced at a dinner given last Monday evening by her mother, Mrs. Albert W. Nicholson, at her beautiful home, "Haviland," in Dedham. There were fifty dinner guests and the house was very full.

The hospitality for Miss Chase took the form of a reception and the given Saturday afternoon from 5 to 7 by her mother, Mrs. William L. Chase, at her home, "Brookline," in Brookline. Miss Chase's two older sisters, Miss Julia and Miss Mary, were also present.

LOVE REKINDLED WIFE OF WIRE KING RAGED WITH DEATH

E. B. Webster Expired in South as Bride Who Sought Divorce Reached His Side.

BRINGS BODY TO NORTH

Former Lynn Girl, Estranged From Boston Financier, For-gave Him as Life Ebbbed.

HAD A METEORIC CAREER

From Poor Clerk With Lawson Webster Rose to Be Millionaire and Society Leader.

WITH the love which she thought gone forever strangely revived, Mrs. Anna Moulton Webster, summoned to the death bed of her husband, Everett B. Webster, the millionaire president of the National Steel and Wire Company, from whom she has been seeking a divorce, hastened from Lynn to Jacksonville, Fla., to assure him before he died that she again loved him. In the long, swift race of steel and steam against death, death won.

Mrs. Webster died last Friday afternoon, just twenty minutes before her wife rushed to his room. The wife was too late to tell her husband that she loved him as she did when he led her to the altar years ago.

Now doing everything she could to love the memory of the man who loved her well for something which she had given up, she lay in the room where she will lie in state, and tried to avenge that she was not with him when he died.

End of Meteoric Career.

This is the final chapter in the meteoric career of the well-known Boston, New York and London financier, who made his first start in life as a lowly salaried clerk in the office of Thomas W. Lawson and within a few short years attained his meteoric rise to the position of president of the National Steel and Wire Company.

His meteoric rise to the position of president of the National Steel and Wire Company was a story which has been told in many columns of this paper. It was a story of a man who rose from a poor clerk to a millionaire in a few short years.

Car Inspector and Station Baggage Agent Men Who Lost Their Lives.

Brunswick, Me., Dec. 1.—Two men were killed and another probably fatally injured in a boiler explosion which occurred in the Maine Central railroad station here at four minutes after midnight to-night.

The dead are Walter Harris, Brunswick car inspector, and W. H. Woodward, station baggage agent.

The wounded, Joseph Perrault, Brunswick, a railroad coal passer, condition critical.

Frederick Sylvester, Brunswick, night agent of the American Express Company.

Harris and Woodward were buried beneath a mass of wreckage, and it took several men and a team of oxen to dig their bodies out. They were crushed almost beyond recognition.

Narrow Escape for Many.

A score of passengers had just vacated the waiting room when one of the two boilers under the floor of the room and near a main entrance to exploded.

The disaster happened ten minutes sooner than probably would have been had the boiler exploded at a later hour.

The explosion killed Harris and Woodward, and injured Perrault. The explosion also killed Harris and Woodward, and injured Perrault.

MORAN CALLS ON DEMOCRATS TO DEFEAT FITZGERALD

District Attorney John B. Moran issued the following statement last night.

John F. Fitzgerald's political and official methods are so well known to me that I under no circumstances could vote for him or support him for any office.

In 1896 I exposed him in an article published in the Boston Post. Since that time my knowledge of him has increased, and with the added knowledge my contempt for him politically has grown to such an extent as to be beyond expression.

I never voted for him for any office, and I never will. The best interests of Boston require his defeat. The best interests of Democracy require his defeat.

MAYOR SIDESTEPS ISSUES

Labor Orators Attack Fitzgerald's Record and Appeal to Voters to Save City.

THE three candidates for Mayor, John A. Coulthurst, Independence League, John F. Fitzgerald, Democrat, and George A. Hibbard, Republican, were on the stump last night.

Trained observers of political events declared at midnight that the tide is unmistakably in Coulthurst's favor. The League candidate addressed 1,600 voters in the South End and in Roxbury.

Senator Lodge's candidate, Postmaster George A. Hibbard, visited the Young Men's Republican Club at the corner of Hancock and Trull streets in Dorchester. There were 100 voters present.

Fifteen or twenty of them are employed in the United States postal service. They had a pleasant evening.

Fitzgeraldism's candidate began the night in Central Hall, Centre street, where he spoke to 400 men. There was, as usual, a heavy sprinkling of city employees.

There was enthusiasm for Mr. Fitzgerald. The Mayor was on the defensive, talking about the city's finances.

38 Compose Audience.

Coming downtown, Mr. Fitzgerald dropped in on the Shawmut Club in Train street, where he continued to talk about finance. The Shawmut has a membership of seventy-five.

The Fitzgerald audience, by actual count, numbered thirty-eight. Most of them may have been club members.

Cool. The Mayor looked the work by dropping in at the far in St. Augustine Hall at Roxbury Crossing, where he shook hands with everybody who came within reach.

Never letting up on Fitzgerald and Fitzgeraldism, including yesterday's Panett Hall pork for money and demanding that Mayor Fitzgerald come out man fashion from behind his six brothers, John A. Coulthurst, in the South End and Roxbury last night to 1,600 earnest and enthusiastic-minded people.

1,200 Cheer Coulthurst.

In the Vice Street Church, at Roxbury, Mr. Coulthurst addressed a large audience. He was greeted with a shout of "Hello, Coulthurst!" as he entered the church.

Mr. Coulthurst was much more affected by the 1,200 cheering crowd for him and kept them in his proceedings at a point in his speech when he called for a vote for the A. C. U. men.

Next, a man named James J. Hayes, the elected clerk, introduced the Mayor of the city in his meeting.

Mr. Hayes, who was at the head of the building, called upon the crowd to elect a man to the position of Mayor.

Mayor's Labor Record.

John F. Fitzgerald, it strikes some of the men, some of the city employees, does not care for the city's interests.

Talks on Teeth
By G. GORDON MARTIN
A Message
to Toothless Humanity

If the message of the wonder and blessings of the Alveolar Method of teeth restoration—without plates or bridge work—comes to you for the first time in this advertisement, you may consider this your lucky day.

The man who is blessed with good health is a lucky man, and in order that he may enjoy good health, he must have good teeth. These are the fundamentals. "Check your food," the doctors cry. "I wish I could," the man without good teeth replies. "I haven't been able to eat my meat for years."

plates of bridge work as it is ordinarily put in the mouth—a row of teeth set in between two "pieces" of teeth, high in the middle, so that when one bites or attempts to bite on it the two pier teeth receive a tremendous strain, and soon become sore and loose."

We come to you to-day with the greatest message ever written—the man or woman who has lost teeth through disease or ignorance identifies himself with the millions.

The Alveolar Method of supplying missing teeth is a boon to humanity. No plates needed—no tiresome bridgework, no boring, no cutting, saving—nothing that you need dread about the new method.

All we require is that you have two or more teeth left in either law. No matter whether they are sound or not. We will examine them carefully and make the sound if it is within the limits of dental skill to do so. The work of putting these teeth in the mouth and anchoring them is not in the least painful.

Once in, the work takes anywhere from two to four sittings in complete, depending on the amount

BITTER WAR WAGED BY NEW ENGLAND RABBIS OVER KOSHER MEAT

Hebrews Divided by Fight in Which It Is Declared Beef Trust Plays Hand.

CHARGES BY BOTH SIDES

"Attempt to Raise Prices on Poor People," Says One Faction, "Lie," Say Others.

TALK FREELY OF BRIBES

Religious Crusade Alleged to Cloak Plot to Stifle Competition Against Combine.

A BITTER war, with kosher meat as the issue, and two rabbis acting as its leaders, is being waged in the city of Boston. The opposing factions, and with the Beef Trust and its usual thumping of horns looming up in the background, has broken out into a bitter struggle of the kind which has been known to the orthodox Hebrews of New England.

"We want the meat used by the orthodox Jews to be religiously pure," declares one side.

"You want to destroy competition, and to charge exorbitant prices," answers the other.

Grave accusations are made. It is charged that the Beef Trust has been in the city for years, and that it has been using its influence to secure the best of the city's meat supply. It is charged that the Beef Trust has been using its influence to secure the best of the city's meat supply.

Rabbis' Fight to "Trust"

It was alleged that the Beef Trust had been in the city for years, and that it has been using its influence to secure the best of the city's meat supply. It is charged that the Beef Trust has been using its influence to secure the best of the city's meat supply.

"Attempt to Put Up Prices"

The shop of my brother and sister was condemned because it was alleged that the two of them were selling inferior meat. We had two competitors. They were selling inferior meat. We had two competitors. They were selling inferior meat.
